"In Yohen, Philip Kan Gotanda -- one of America's leading playwrights and a Bay Area resident -- creates a poetic and compassionate love story illustrating the challenges facing a husband and wife after 30 years of marriage. James, an African-American World War II veteran, and his Japanese wife, Sumi, struggle to understand how their marriage, colored by family tension and marred by cultural misunderstanding, has transformed them -- just as pottery is transformed during the firing process. In Japanese, such kiln changes are called yohen, and the results are as complex and unpredictable as the evolution of a relationship."-- Goldstar.com
